Classmates :

The thirtieth anniversary of our graduation finds our number diminished by the loss of Brooks, Bunton, Edmands, Lowell, and Monks, who have died since my last report.

These pages contain the record of your lives for the past five years and should be considered as supplementary to the twenty-fifth anniversary report, of which I have a number left on hand, and which I will be pleased to send to any of you who may have lost or mislaid his copy.

It is hardly to be expected that I should supply information concerning our descendants through all generations, but as the period covered by this report is the one in which our grandchildren have seen the light I have thought it would be interesting to insert the marriages of our children and the births of our grandchildren. These you will find in the Summary.

The promptness of your answers has been a very great assistance to me.

Our funds were somewhat reduced by the unusual expense of the twenty-fifth anniversary, but they are sufficient for our reasonable needs, and the Class Scholarship is available for the purposes for which it was established.

FRANCIS HENRY LINCOLN,
Class Secretary.

*ARTHUR BROOKS.

Born in Boston, June 11, 1845. Died at sea, on the voyage from Southampton to New York, July 10, 1895.

The Rev. Arthur Brooks, D. D., was the fifth of six brothers, viz.: 1. William Gray; 2. Phillips [H. C. 1855]; 3. George [L. S. S. 1861]; 4. Frederick [H. C. 1863]; 5. Arthur [H. C. 1867]; 6. John Cotton [H. C. 1872]. Four became Episcopal ministers. He was of pure New England stock, tracing his descent from John Brooks who came to this country in 1630 and settled in Watertown, and whose descendants are identified with Medford and other Massachusetts and New Hampshire towns; from the Rev. John Cotton, the minister of the First Church in Boston; from the Grays of Essex County and Boston; and from the Rev. George Phillips, of Watertown, who came over in 1630 with Governor Winthrop, and whose descendants were the founders of the Phillips Academies of Andover and Exeter. He was educated in the public schools of Boston and fitted for college at the Boston Latin School, where he took the full course of six years. While in the Latin School he received twenty prizes for good conduct and excellence in the prescribed studies, declamation, etc., and also a Franklin medal. He entered college with the Class, in 1863, without conditions. His prizes while in college were a detur in Sophomore year; first Bowdoin prize for dissertation and two Lee prizes for reading in Junior year; a prize for reading in Senior year. He had parts at the Junior and Senior exhibitions and at Commencement. His rank in the Class was Freshman 4, Sophomore 5, Junior 3, Senior 3, and on general scale for the whole course 3. His falling off in the Sophomore year was undoubtedly owing to mathematics, for which he had little taste, his natural aptitude being for classical and other studies, which afforded him greater opportunity in the Junior and Senior years. He was a member of the Society of Christian Brethren, St. Paul's Religious Society, Institute of 1770, Harvard Natural History Society, Hasty Pudding Club, and Phi Beta Kappa Society. His chum all through college was William Homer, and it is a singular coincidence that both died at sea on the voyage home from abroad. He joined the Episcopal Church March 29, 1863, being confirmed by Bishop Eastburn in Trinity Church, Boston. After graduation he entered the Theological Seminary at Andover and remained there one year. In September, 1868, he entered the Episcopal Divinity School at West Philadelphia, where he was graduated in 1870. June 25, 1870, he was ordained deacon in the Protestant Episcopal Church in Trinity Church, Boston. July 10, 1870, he entered on the rectorship of Trinity Church, Williamsport, Pa., and was ordained priest, in Williamsport, October 12, 1870. Here he remained until April, 1872. April 28, 1872, he became rector of St. James Church, Chicago, Ill. April 3, 1875, he resigned this rectorship, and April 18, 1875, he assumed the rectorship of the Church of the Incarnation, New York City. This position he held until his death. He travelled extensively abroad, having made several summer trips and one of nearly a year's length in 1886–87, when he visited Egypt, Palestine, top of Mt. Sinai, Arabian Desert, Greece, etc. A volume of his sermons was published under the title of "The Life of Christ in the World," 1887. He was chairman of the Board of Trustees of Barnard College for Women in New York City from its incorporation in 1889. The degree of Doctor of Divinity was conferred upon him by the University of the City of New York in 1891, and by Princeton College in 1892. October 12, 1872, he was married in Williamsport, Pa., to Lizzie Willard, of Williamsport, by the Rev. Phillips Brooks, of Boston. This is a bare statement of the facts of Dr. Brooks's life. Perhaps they tell the story more effectively than any words of eulogy. The Class has lost a strong man, whose learning and breadth of thought and life of usefulness have reflected credit upon it, and an esteemed member whose warm-hearted good-fellowship has endeared him to every member of it.

It would fill a volume if one were to attempt any complete review of his life. A few points only can be dwelt upon in this notice.

He impresses us with his great energy and power as an organizer. Let us condense some of the statements from numerous eulogies and obituary notices to illustrate this.

One year after he was ordained a priest of the Protestant Episcopal Church, the great fire of Chicago swept away the beautiful and costly church of St. James. Its rector had been there but a few weeks and was but little acquainted with his parishioners, and had no ties to bind him there; and as he left for another field, it seemed doubtful if there would ever be another such church as St. James. With singular foresight, Arthur Brooks, then only twenty-six years of age, was unanimously elected rector. The ability of the church to pay a living salary was very uncertain, and two calls were then under consideration by our classmate, one from St. Luke's, Philadelphia, and another from a large church in Newark, N. J., both with large salaries. He was informed that not more than $2,500 or $3,000 a year could be promised to begin with. "I will go with you; make it the lesser sum," was the answer.

In April, 1872, he began in the dust and ashes, the wide-spread ruin and utter desolation of a burned-up city, to rebuild what had been the foremost church of the Northwest, and to gather together a congregation which had been accustomed to the eloquence of distinguished predecessors. His first sermon was preached in the vestibule of the old church, which had been roofed over and made into a temporary chapel, and was full of hope and encouragement. He won all hearts at once. His introduction to public notice was no less successful in the following month of May, when, on Memorial Day, he addressed as many thousands as could get within reach of his voice at Rosehill, in such a manner as to leave his hearers with the impression that patriotism had not died out from that desolate city.

The task of rebuilding St. James was accompanied by untold difficulties. Every parishioner save one on the North Side had lost home, office, and property; the cost of building materials and labor increased; the country had suffered by other great fires in the West and in Boston. The vestry of his church had undertaken to build a much larger and more costly church than the former. But the following statistics show what wonders were accomplished.

The year before the fire there were 314 communicants, and the money contributions for strictly church purposes were about $35,000. The year after the fire there were 100 communicants and the money contributions were about $3,000. In 1873 the contributions were more than $33,000; in 1874 more than $34,000; and in 1875 there were 220 communicants, with all church work intelligently organized and vigorously prosecuted. All this was, without doubt, largely owing to the confidence and esteem in which the pastor was held.

When the work of rebuilding St. James was assured, in the spring of 1875, he was unanimously elected rector of the Church of the Incarnation, on Madison Avenue, in New York City. He began his new work with almost as discouraging an outlook as there was at his beginning in Chicago. There was a mortgage debt on the church of $48,000, and a floating debt of $6,500. Not only was this indebtedness paid off by almost if not the only Episcopal church in New York City which never asked for or received help from Old Trinity — but missions were built by it and hospital and other charities added. Just as his church work seemed relieved of all embarrassments, the building was burned, March 23, 1882, involving a loss of $75,000. The church was promptly rebuilt, and the restored church, built by his own congregation, again without help from Old Trinity, was embellished with artistic decoration, much of it suggested by the fine taste which Dr. Brooks had developed in his studies of church architecture.

From 1889 to the close of his life he took an active interest in the establishment and endowment of Barnard College for the higher education of women (a college with the same courses of study as those of Columbia College).

Hon. Seth Low, President of Columbia College, in a commemorative address, after speaking of what a college education means to a college-bred man, said: —

"Those are the things, I think, that a college education meant to Arthur Brooks. Because they meant that to him he thought they would mean the same thing to a woman. He believed in the capacity of women, by the same process, to get that larger vision, that sense of the greater universe, that perspective in life, that idealism with which her brothers, generation after generation, had been touched. And because he believed that women could so profit by this college training, he felt that they were entitled, as their brothers were, to take opportunity by the hand and make the most of it. He did not claim that it was for every woman, any more than for every man; but he did believe that for those who wanted it the opportunity ought to exist. And then, I know he felt that the absence of this opportunity in the city of New York, until Barnard College was founded, was a great reproach to the city, and that he must do what he could to remove that reproach."

He conducted his church in New York on conservative lines, and it was attended largely by those who could not bring themselves into sympathy with the ritualism which was spreading itself over the parishes of the city. By a strong and unyielding emphasis upon the fundamental teachings of Christian doctrine he kept the attention of his listeners, and gave them what was helpful and stimulating without the distraction of mere ceremonies.

In June, 1895, he went abroad, in the hope of finding relief from the disease which had fastened itself upon him. The voyage was of no benefit to him. After remaining a few days at Southampton he took passage for home on the same steamer on which he had been an outward-bound passenger, and died before reaching New York. His body was brought to New York, and a few days later buried in Mount Auburn in the family lot, by the side of his brothers Phillips and Frederick.

*WILLIAM AUGUSTUS BUNTON.

Born in Manchester, N. H., June 7, 1846. Died in Great Falls, Montana, July 20, 1893.

He was the son of David Augustus and Eliza Jane [Adams] Bunton, and a lineal descendant of Robert Bunton, who came to this country from Londonderry, Ireland, about 1720, and settled in Londonderry, N. H. Robert afterwards moved to Allentown, now Suncook, where he and his son Andrew were taken prisoners by the Indians and carried to Canada. This son was afterwards a captain in the Revolution at the battle of Bennington, and was afterwards killed at the battle of White Plains.

Bunton had always lived in Manchester until 1865, when his parents moved to Cambridge, Mass. He was educated in the Grammar and High schools of Manchester, and in April, 1863, he went to Phillips Academy at Andover, Mass., where he was graduated in July, 1863, and was admitted to Harvard College at the second examination in 1863.

He stood high on the rank list all through college. At the beginning of the Sophomore year he received Milton's Poetical Works as a detur. He had a part at the October Junior exhibition, a Latin dialogue from "Terence" with Worthington, his chum; at the May Senior exhibition a dissertation, "American and European Cannon," and at Commencement a disquisition, "The Atom in Modern Chemistry."

He was one of the first eight elected into the Phi Beta Kappa, in April, 1866.

For two years after graduation he was in business with his father in Cairo, Ill.

In May, 1869, he came to Boston, and entered the employ of Wadley, Spurr & Co., wholesale grocers. The firm was afterwards Wadley, Andrews & Co., and January 1, 1878, he was admitted as a partner. January 1, 1881, the firm name was changed to Wadley, Andrews & Bunton. He remained a partner in this firm until April, 1886.

In 1891 he went to Great Falls, Montana, in connection with mining interests controlled by Boston owners, and remained there until his death, which was sudden and accidental. His body was brought East and buried in Cambridge Cemetery.

He was much interested in Free Masonry, in which he attained the highest degrees.

We remember him as a hearty, nervously active, good-natured fellow, and a good scholar in college. Other associations and distance prevented our seeing much of him in later years, yet we have good reasons for the belief that his affection for us all was no less than ours had always been for him.

He writes: —

"Was imprisoned again early in 1895 for preaching the Gospel freely and publicly on Boston Common in 1894, which God-ordained service has been made a crime by city ordinance. Continued therein some weeks until released by writ of error to United States Supreme Court."

The following is the result of his appeal: —

May 10, 1897. "The Supreme Court sustained the decisions of the Massachusetts courts which punished an itinerant preacher, William F. Davis, for preaching on Boston Common on June 10, 1894, without a permit from the Mayor. Davis claimed that the ordinance giving the Mayor control over the Common and forbidding any public address there without his permission, was in conflict with the fourteenth amendment to the Constitution.

"Justice White, who delivered the opinion of the court, said that the fourteenth amendment did not destroy the power of the States to enact police regulations as to the subjects within their control, and that the ordinance properly granted administrative functions to the Mayor in the control of the Common."

* THOMAS SPRAGUE EDMANDS.

Born in Boston, July 27, 1844. Died in Boston, January 25, 1897.

His father was John Wiley Edmands, of Boston, and his mother was Rebecca Ann Cushing, of Baltimore. His parents lived in Boston until about 1845, when they moved to Newton, Mass. He was there fitted for college by John W. Hunt, intending to enter the Class of 1864, but not being in very good health, in July, 1860, his father sent him abroad, where he spent about fifteen months travelling and studying in Switzerland.

On his return he reviewed his classics under the instruction of John Noble, of Boston, and passed his examinations for admission to college in the summer of 1862. On the day following his admission he enlisted in the Forty-fourth Regiment Massachusetts Volunteers, and spent nine months with his regiment in North Carolina. In the fall of 1863 he was admitted to our Class without an examination.

He was conspicuous all through the college course as an oarsman. In the annual Harvard regattas, in Freshman, Sophomore, and Junior years he was in the Class crew, and in the Senior year he was one of the Harvard crew which defeated Yale, at Worcester, making the greatest time in America at that time for a six-oared three-mile race with a turn.

After leaving college he studied law at the Harvard Law School during the year 1867–68.

He then became a member of the firm of Wills, Edmands & Co., East India merchants, in Boston.

In August, 1870, he went to Calcutta, India, and remained there until 1883. He was at the head of the Calcutta house of his firm until January 1, 1878, when the firm was dissolved, and a new firm, Edmands Brothers & Co., was formed, he being the resident member in Calcutta. This firm was dissolved in 1881, and he remained in Calcutta, connected with Whitney Brothers & Co., until his return to America in 1883. During this time he made two visits home, remaining here from January to August, 1874, and from March, 1877, to the spring of 1878.

From May, 1883, to September 1, 1887, he was Treasurer of the Ipswich Mills, and of the Gilmanton Mills, both hosiery mills. On the latter date he became Treasurer of the Cocheco Manufacturing Company, which office he held until January, 1895.

He went to England and Scotland in 1890.

On the evening of January 25, 1897, he died suddenly in the Columbus Avenue station of the Boston and Albany Railroad, while waiting for a train. He had hurried for the train, and expired shortly after reaching the station.

To every member of the Class his death causes a feeling of personal loss. With him the relation of classmate was a bond of warmest friendship and loyalty. He possessed in an unusual degree that unexplained sentiment of "class feeling" and that college "spirit" which, in our day, was the mainspring of success in college contests. He put into them not only his splendid strength, but his whole soul.

This "spirit" won races in those days. In after years this same heartiness was apparent. He was open as the day. His classmates and the college could always depend upon him for loyal support. There was no mean streak in him. He was a generous man. Few knew of his many unselfish acts of kindness and helpfulness. Without ostentation or hope of reward he gave freely and modestly to those who were less fortunate, when he had means at command. His right hand knew not what his left hand did. He had his trials and disappointments, but they were never made a burden for others to bear.

We remember him affectionately, as one who was always a true friend and classmate.

WILLIAM ROGERS ELLIS. Born 1846.

He writes, "I am still in the real estate and insurance business, with offices in Lyceum Building, Cambridge — in what was Lyons Brothers' billiard room when we were in college — and in Equitable Building, Boston. In 1893 Robert J. Melledge [H. U. 1877], of Cambridge, joined with me under the firm name of Ellis & Melledge. We deal almost entirely in properties directly about the University grounds. I built a student dormitory, Prescott Hall, in 1896, on the plan of Holworthy, and live there as Proctor four or five days in the week with my eldest son, but manage to get away two or three days in the week to Barnstable, Mass., where my wife and younger children live, and where I try to make believe I am a farmer."

Has been to England or France, or both, each year since 1892.

Vice-President of Brookline Savings Bank.

President of Massachusetts Society Sons of the Revolution.

The following episode in his life the Secretary deems of sufficient interest to report: —

Extract from the Minutes of the Vestry of St. Paul's Church in Brookline, Mass.

"The Vestry of Saint Paul's Church in Brookline, having received the resignation of Mr. Clement K. Fay, as organist, desire to enter upon the records their appreciation of the long and devoted services rendered by Mr. Fay, and their regret that he feels compelled to give up the active charge of the music of the Church.

"On February 9, 1863, Mr. Fay assumed the duties of organist, and for thirty-three years has given his time and strength, unremittingly and ungrudgingly, to this important part of the church's service. He has carried on this work voluntarily, without other compensation than that higher satisfaction arising from the contemplation of work accomplished in the great cause of the Church.

"Few can realize what thirty-three years of this kind of labor really means — the self-sacrifice, the steadfastness of aim, the unvaried purpose which must be united to carry this burden through such an extended term of activity. St. Paul's will miss the taste in the selection of churchly music and the skill in its execution which have always characterized Mr. Fay's work.

"In thus recording an acknowledgment of Mr. Fay's services, we are sure we voice not only the sentiment of the Vestry, but also that of the great body of worshippers in St. Paul's.

"However feeble may seem these words, they are intended to record our tender and sincere gratitude for the high standard which Mr. Fay has established for the music of our Church, and our appreciation of this long record of loving care and devotion which may well be held up as an example for emulation.

"LEONARD K. STORRS, for the Vestry.

"DESMOND FITZGERALD.

"JAN. 27, 1896."

The appreciation of his long services was also expressed in material form by a valuable memento, the gift of the worshippers at St. Paul's.

Born in Boston, October 18, 1845. Died in Cotuit, Mass., May 11, 1894.

Our classmate was the youngest of the five children of Francis Cabot Lowell [H. C. 1821], and Mary, daughter of Samuel P. Gardner.

In August, 1854, when he was less than nine years old, his mother died, and, in accordance with her wish, his father took him abroad shortly after and placed him in Sillig's school, near Vevay, in Switzerland. This school was at that time of high reputation. Here he spent three years acquiring a knowledge of the French and German languages. This experience was of great advantage to him in his later historical work. After leaving this school he travelled in Italy, and on his return home he was fitted for college at the private Latin School of Mr. Epes Sargent Dixwell, in Boston. He entered college with the Class in 1863. His skill in writing poetry gained him a reputation in college, and he was Poet of the Institute of 1770, of the Hasty Pudding Club, and Class Odist. He also made several poetical contributions to the Advocate, some of which were afterwards published in "Verses from the Harvard Advocate." Curiously enough, after leaving college, although possessing a strong love of poetry, he wrote very little verse, and never printed a line.

After graduation he travelled in Europe in the summer and autumn of 1867.

He was married in Cambridge, January 4, 1868, to Mary W. Goodrich, daughter of "Peter Parley," and again went to Europe for a few months.

After his return he was in business for a short time with Hills, Turner & Harmon, importers of glass. He soon became convinced that he was not fitted for a business life, and in 1870 he decided to study law. This he did for a year at the Harvard Law School, and for another year in the office of Ropes & Gray, in Boston. He was admitted to the bar in 1872, and opened an office in Boston. April 5, 1874, his wife died, and he thereupon decided to abandon the active practice of law, and to devote himself to literary pursuits and the care and education of his three young children, — Alice, born February 25, 1869, who received the Class cradle; Guy, born August 6, 1870, and Frederick Eldridge, born March 30, 1874.

June 19, 1877, he was married to Elizabeth G. Jones, daughter of George Jones, of New York, one of the founders of the New York Times.

To carry out his educational plans he went to Europe in 1879 with his family, passing two winters in Dresden and two in Paris, travelling extensively in the summers, and returned home again in May, 1883.

It was during his stay in Germany that he became interested in the history of the mercenary troops employed by England in the Revolutionary War, and collected material for that work, being enabled to make use of sources of information which had never fallen under the eye of an American writer. After the publication of the results of this study he began a life of Lafayette, and accumulated a considerable amount of material for that purpose, but finding that another writer was engaged in the same work, which was nearly ready for publication, he changed his plan, and determined to examine the condition of France at the outbreak of the Revolution. This research found its consummation in a published volume in 1892.

He was Trustee of Boston Athenæum, 1885; Chairman of the Committee to examine the Boston Public Library, 1885; member of Massachusetts Historical Society, 1884; American Historical Association, 1886; New York Historical Society, 1886; Phi Beta Kappa, 1886; American Academy of Arts and Sciences, 1887; Military Historical Society of Massachusetts, 1888.

For many years he was a very efficient Trustee of the Boston Athenæum, and brought about a marked improvement and increase in its art collections. In the winter of 1893 he passed considerable time in Athens in the agreeable companionship of the professors and students of the American School of Classical Studies of which he had been treasurer for several years, and was thus enabled to procure valuable additions to the art collection of the Athenæum.

He was unexpectedly called home by illness in his family, and shortly after was affected by mysterious but alarming symptoms, arising from a tumor on the brain, which caused his death May 11, 1894.

The following is a chronological list of his publications: —

1880–81. The Hessians. —N. Y. Times.
1884. The Hessians; extended to a volume.
1887. Journal of Captain Pausch. —Introduction.
1887. German MS. Documents. —Proc. Mass. Hist. Soc.
1887. Memoir of L. M. Sargent. —Proc. Mass. Hist. Soc.
1887. Adventures of a Hessian Recruit. —Proc. Mass. Hist. Soc.
1887. Bayeux Tapestry. —Scribner's Magazine.
1888. A Liberal Education. —Atlantic Monthly.
1888. The United States, their Political Struggles and Relations with Europe. — Nar. and Crit. Hist. of America.
1889. Life of Benvenuto Cellini. —Scribner's Magazine.
1892. The Eve of the French Revolution.

1893. Clothes Historically Considered. —Scribner's Magazine.
1893. Memoir of Lord Tennyson. —Proc. Amer. Acad.
Numerous Reviews and Editorials.

This is his record as the world knows it, but to those who knew him intimately it is not all. Here is the testimony of one who was very near to him: —

"He was able to enjoy to the last the immeasurable comfort of the warm and glad devotion of his family, whose affection for him was as strong a passion as his for them had been. He was eminently a student and lover of mankind. He was bound to his friends not only by unusually warm affection and loyalty, but also by an intensely social instinct, which kept him in close sympathy with their lesser as well as their greater joys and sorrows. And as it was with his friends, so it was with the wider circles of society and of humanity. The details of men's lives were dear to him, and where his interest was touched at all it was touched strongly."

Another says: —

"In speaking of his writings one feels that part, and only a small part, of his life has been touched. His strong social instincts, and his quick and comprehensive sympathy made the other side of his life peculiarly rich and full; but while his literary work may be described and estimated, the worth of his personal character cannot be measured. The devotion to his family, the affection for his friends, the thoughtful courtesy and kindness to every one with whom he was brought into contact, and above all, the conscientious sense of duty, simple, quiet, unostentatious, lenient towards others, inexorable towards himself, will never be forgotten by those who knew him."

It is more especially the purpose of this notice to recall him as a classmate. He was loyal, above all collections of men with whom he was associated, to his Class and college. No call for sympathy for a classmate was unheeded, and no appeal for material helpfulness ever came to his notice in vain. His interest in every classmate was unselfish and sincere. By those of us in and around Boston, who met him more frequently and who were thrown into closer social and business relations with him than those in more remote places, his loss is peculiarly felt and his winning qualities of mind and heart appreciated. He was a staunch, steadfast, trusting friend and companion. It is good for us to have known him. It is sad for us to lose him. He loved us as we loved him, and we cherish his memory as that of one who has made our lives happier through many years. In school, in college, and in the more mature after years, we who have known him intimately have always found him a warm-hearted, closely attached friend and companion.

*HENRY GRAFTON MONKS.

Born in Boston, June 6, 1846. Died in Nice, France, May 23, 1893.

He was the son of John P. and Delia S. [Hatton] Monks. He was educated in the Boston public schools, and was fitted for college in the Boston Latin School. He received several diplomas and a Franklin medal at the Hawes Grammar School and a Franklin medal at the Latin School.

After graduation he went to Europe where he remained until 1869. In 1870 he went to California, invested in ranch property and held it until about 1881, part of the time being spent in farming, with occasional visits to Boston and Europe, during which he devoted some time to the study of architecture.

From 1881 until his death he remained most of the time in Europe, spending his winters in the southern and his summers in the more northern countries.

He was seldom present at our meetings, and as so much of his time was spent abroad, we have seen but little of him since graduation. He rarely made direct answer to the Secretary's inquiries, and because of that growing tendency to become less and less communicative when one is far away, few particulars of his life can be given. Occasionally a classmate would fall in with him. J. C. Jackson saw him in Paris some years ago and took breakfast with him. He then "looked a fine gentleman in perfect condition," so Jackson says. He died, as above stated, in Nice, May 23, 1893.

WILLIAM MONTGOMERY. Born 1844.

Lawyer in New York.

WILLIAM JAMES MORTON. Born 1845.

Physician in New York. Professor of Electro-Therapeutics and of Diseases of the Mind and Nervous System in the New York Post-Graduate School and Hospital.

Went to Europe twice in the winter of 1894.

Is a member of the following societies not previously reported: Medical Society of the State of New York; New York Physicians' Mutual Aid Society; New York Electro-Therapeutic Association; Harvard Medical Society of New York City; Harvard Medical Alumni Association; American Medical Association; Congress of American Physicians and Surgeons; Société Français d'Electro-Therapie; New York Electrical Society; and was a delegate to the International Medical Congress at Rome, 1894.

Since 1892 his publications have been: "Upon a Possible Electric Polarity of Metabolism, and its Relations to Electro-Therapeutics and Electro-Physiology"; "A Brief Glance at Electricity in Medicine"; "Ozone and its Uses in Medicine"; "Electricity in Medicine from a Modern Standpoint"; "Discovery of Anæsthesia"; "Diseases of the Spinal Cord"; "Electric Medicamental Diffusion"; "Guaiacol-Cocaine Cataphoresis and Local Anæsthesia."

This latter article presents a practical procedure and method for producing a profound local anæsthesia, based upon the fact that electricity drives medicaments into tissue at the positive pole. It gives cases demonstrating that the most sensitive teeth may thus be so benumbed that cavities in them may be excavated and filled without occasioning the slightest pain to the patient, that the gums may be so benumbed as to extract teeth without pain, and finally cites a case where a tumor of considerable size was removed and stitches used, both painlessly. Guaiacol is an essential element to its success; its uses as an anæsthetic, electrically, were discovered by the author of this paper, and it is believed will end in establishing as a largely used process electrical local anæsthesia in dentistry and minor surgery.

In 1881, Dr. Morton devised a mechanism consisting of a Holz or influence machine, and Leyden jars, by means of which a new order of electric current was established (condenser currents in rapid discharge), and termed the current the "static induced current." At that time and again in 1891, he called attention to the peculiar physiological effects produced by the current. In 1892 and subsequently, Nicola Tesla developed the wonderful physical effects known as the "Tesla effects," employing Dr. Morton's current and mechanism for its production. Professors Elihu Thomson, and d'Aesonval of Paris, were also much interested in the physiological effects of his current, the development of which marks an epoch in electro-therapeutics as well as in general electrical science and art. It affects the nutritional processes of the living organism in a much higher degree than any other form of electrical current; it produces the etheric wave light effects of luminosity without conductors, and it is the current by aid of which, when a static machine is used, the rays discovered by Professor Roentgen, of Wurzburg, may be employed to photograph bodies screened by substances opaque to ordinary light, as for instance coins within a purse or the bones of the hand of a living person. It is as yet impossible to foretell, now that luminosity without conductors and photography in darkness is accomplished by aid of Dr. Morton's fundamental electrical mechanism, to what further extent this current discovered and published by him in 1881 and again published in extenso in 1891 may lead.

In 1896 a book by him was published, entitled "The X-Ray or Photography of the Invisible."

In 1894 he discovered an electro-chemical method of staining tissues preparatory to microscopical examination, an account of which was published in the Transactions of the American Electro-Therapeutical Association.

He writes: "During the past five years I have lived in Boston and its vicinity. In 1892 I published the 'Real and Ideal in Literature'; in 1894, 'The Life and Genius of Tintoretto'; in 1895, 'The Midsummer of Italian Art,' and 'Sketches from Concord and Appledore,' which last had been deferred from 1893 on account of the Wilson tariff. This year I shall publish a book called 'Modern English Prose,' and a small volume on 'Summer Travel in Europe.' The preparation for these works has been going on for the last fifteen or twenty years, and but for my ill health they would have seen daylight a long time ago. During the campaign last autumn I published a number of letters on the tariff and the currency in Eastern and Western newspapers. I have just published an article in Lippincott's Magazine on 'Goethe in Practical Politics.'"

Address; 8 Bulfinch Place, Boston.

BELLAMY STORER. Born 1847.

Lawyer. Residence, Cincinnati, Ohio.

Republican Member of the United States House of Representatives in the Fifty-second and Fifty-third Congresses, 1891–95. During his congressional life he served on the Committee on Commerce which brought him into all the interstate commerce legislation. He was an active delegate to the National Board of Trade at its annual meetings in 1892, 1893, 1894, 1895, and 1896. He then served on committees of Interstate Commerce, Reciprocity, and the special Committee on Reform of the Consular Service. He had something to do with bringing about the changes in consular appointment, examination, and tenure of office, prepared by Secretary Olney, and put into execution in November, 1895. He served in the House, also, on the Committee on Foreign Affairs, and prepared the minority report and led the minority during the Hawaiian debate in the winter of 1893–94.

He was a member of the Ohio State Republican Committee in 1893 and 1894, and was Chairman of the Ohio Republican State Convention in 1894.

At the close of his congressional service his friends in Cincinnati thought that his courage in standing out against the other Republican Congressmen from Ohio, and voting in favor of the issue of gold bonds under the option reserved by the Secretary of the Treasury, should be publicly acknowledged, and so, on the evening of March 4, 1895, a complimentary dinner was given to him in Cincinnati, which was attended by one hundred and fifty of the most prominent people in the city, Republicans and Democrats, without regard to political prejudices. Storer made an excellent address, which was well delivered, and excited the admiration of all present. The affair was a great success, a full account of which is preserved in the Class archives.

He went abroad in March, 1895, and returned in October of that year to his Cincinnati home and work.

May 4, 1897, he was appointed United States Minister to Belgium. He expects to reach that country in July next.

Address: U. S. Legation, Brussels, Belgium.

ELWYN WALLER. Born 1846.

He writes as follows: —

"In June, 1894, I came to Morristown, N. J., not having at that time a definite intention of changing my residence, but have since settled into regarding it as my home, and finally clinched it by voting here at the last presidential election. I presume that it may perhaps be said that I have changed my occupation since leaving my professorship at the Columbia School of Mines. It does n't seem quite that way to me. I always was working at the business of analytical and consulting chemistry while teaching, but the latter was my principal occupation. Now, the former has become my chief occupation, though I have not entirely abandoned teaching. I resigned my professorship of analytical chemistry 'to take effect' October 1, 1893. (The resignation was sent in some months before.) Since then I have been practising as analytical and consulting chemist at 440 First Avenue, my old friend, Mr. Schultz, having invited me to make use of his laboratory.

"I intended to report, in 1892, that I was associate editor of the 'School of Mines Quarterly.' I still hold that position. I was, some years ago (1892 or before), Vice-President of the School of Mines Alumni Association.

"I think I only need to report that I continue editorial work in connection with the 'School of Mines Quarterly,' writing abstracts of analytical chemistry, and reviews of books, etc., dealing with that branch. Also a few articles, 'Analysis of Chromite,' 'School of Mines Quarterly,' XIII., 225; 'Great Salt Lake Water,' ib., XIV., 56; 'Probable New Nickel Arsenide,' ib., XIV., 49; 'Analysis of Chrome Ores,' 'Journal of Society of Chemical Industry,' XV., June, 1896. I also got out a third edition of 'Cairns' Quantitative Analysis,' in September, 1896, of which I rewrote about half. My colleague (F. A. Cairns) was writing it in 1879, but was stricken with apoplexy while writing one of the chapters near the end. I took hold of his manuscript, finished it, and got it published for the benefit of his widow in 1880. Brought out a second edition about a year after. The book has maintained its place as a text-book for students, and after dropping my professorship I got time enough to put in shape the various changes I had contemplated in the text, and to get the third edition out, as I have said, last September (H. Holt & Co.).

"Sometime in 1893 I delivered an address before the Schoolmasters' Association of New York, on 'Methods of Teaching Chemistry,' which was printed in their annual publication of such addresses, appearing in December, 1893.

"The New York Public Health Association has dropped out of existence; I have dropped my membership in the American Geographical Society. The Society of Amateur Photography, etc., has coalesced with the Camera Club, under the name 'Camera Club'; I still retain my membership. I have been for some years a member of the Torrey Botanical Club of New York, an organization quite as scientific in its aims, in its particular line, as others calling themselves 'Societies.' I am a member of the Harvard, City, University, and Century Clubs of New York. Each one means something. Harvard, — an interest in our alma mater; University, — interest in what pertains to liberal education in general; City, — interest in the municipal affairs of New York, which I cannot abandon after so long a residence there; Century, — Literature and Art, and the amenities of civilization."

CLASS OF 1867 SCHOLARSHIP.

Our classmate, Samuel Hoar, acted for the executor of the will of Robert Treat Paine, late of Brookline, and whatever fee he received would diminish the amount to be ultimately paid to the College under the will. He was paid two thousand dollars, and disposed of it June 1, 1886, as follows: —

"I give to the President and Fellows of Harvard College the sum of two thousand dollars, to be by them invested and the income thereof annually added to the principal, until the principal shall be thereby increased to twenty-five hundred dollars; and thereafter the net income shall be annually paid at or near the beginning of the second half of each College year, to some member of the Freshman Class, in the Academic Department of Harvard College, who shall seem to the said President and Fellows meritorious and in need of assistance.

"Said fund and the accumulation and income shall be known as the Class of 1867 Scholarship, and in the distribution of the income thereof, children or grandchildren of members of the Class of 1867 of Harvard College, who are deemed worthy, shall be preferred."

The fund was increased by subscriptions from other classmates amounting to $515.86, in 1887 and 1888, making a total of $2,515.86 paid to the College. According to the last annual statement of the Treasurer of Harvard College, the fund amounted to $3,444.58, and is available for the purposes for which it was established.

TWENTY-FIFTH ANNIVERSARY.

The twenty-fifth anniversary of our graduation was celebrated in 1892.

At the class supper, June 28, 1892, the evening before Commencement day, at Young's Hotel, in Boston, forty-nine were present. The attendance was a larger percentage of those living than at any meeting of the Class since graduation and the largest but one in actual number. The supper was followed by speeches, and the singing of the Class Song, "Fair Harvard," and "Auld Lang Syne." Delegations from the Class of '64, which was dining at the same hotel, and from the Class of '69, which was dining at the Parker House, visited the Class during the evening with testimonials of their regard. The Class conveyed its respects in like manner to the Class of '64 by a committee, the lateness of the hour preventing a similar return of civilities to the Class of '69. The Secretary's printed report was distributed. The evening appeared to be one of entire satisfaction and pleasure to all.

Forty-nine members of the Class were in Cambridge on Commencement Day. The custom which has been observed, in late years, of appointing the Chief Marshal from the Class which has been graduated twenty-five years was followed on this occasion, and Eliot C. Clarke was the Chief Marshal of the Alumni. Among his Aids and Marshals were the following from our Class, — Aids: Edmands and Hoar; Assistant Marshals: Fay, Jones, Lincoln, and Lowell. Every member of the Class received an invitation to the Chief Marshal's spread in University Hall, from one to two o'clock. A table was reserved at the dinner in Memorial Hall, near the platform, for the Class. Hoar responded for the Class at the dinner, it being the custom to notice especially the classes of fifty and twenty-five years' standing.
